HINES' HARD HIT.

IT SAVED THE WASHINGTONS FROM DEFEAT AND TIED THE SCORE.

Dawd Won the Game on a Triple to Left -A Close Contest That Was Won in the Last Inning-Fine Fielding and Batting-Diamond Dots.

Hines' bard hit in the ninth inning tied the score in the Washington-Athletic game vesterday, and when Dowd followed with a triple that sent the winning run over the rubber there was an outburst of cheering and applause that lasted for several minutes. It was a grand batting rally that surprised the crowd and astonished the visitors, for Weyling was pitching magnificent ball and up to that time only three scattering hits had been made off his delivery. The score was 2 to 1 in favor of the visitors when Visner went to the bat. It was the last chance the boys would have, and but few of the 1,500 spectators dared hope for any different ending than a defeat. But it is the unexpected that happens and Visner cracked out a stinging single to left. Paul Hines then faced the pitcher. He has not been hitting well this season thus far, and when he tried to sacrilice the crowd lost courage. However, he hit the bail, and as it rolled to the fence in right field Visner went learing around the bases like a quarter horse and scored the tieing run, while Hines went to third. Dowd was the next man and to him fell the lot of winning the game, for he cracked out a triple and scored himself on Corcoran's fumble of Davis' hard hit grounder.

The game was keenly contested and characterized by sharp fielding on both sides. The visitors outbatted the local men, but were unable to bunch their hits. The sharp fielding of the Wasbingtons and McGuire's quick throwing to bases preyented them from scoring. Dowd distinguished himself in the field, accepting eleven chances and participating in two double plays and losing another through a doubtful decision of the umpire. The battery work of Weyhing and Cross and Coreozan's playing were features of the visitors' game.

AMUSEMENTS.

In these days when there is such a de nand for naturalness and realism on the stage, the palm for superiority must be stage, the paim for superiority must be awarded to "The Still Alarm." Nothing in the way of sensational realistic episodes has ever been shown that can equal it. Aside from this, the play is much better and of more literary merit than the ordinary melodrama which depends on realism alone for success and introduces such effects without rhyme or reason. Mr. Joseph Arthur must be given credit for originality and novelty in his well-written drama.

On the roll of heroesthe gallant fireman has been neglected by the realistic dramatist, and it has remained for Mr Arthur to discover the dramatic capability of the courageous fireman and install him as the heroe of a pulsating and exciting as the heroe of a pulsating and exciting drama. He shows him in repose and in action. A glimpse is given of him as he appears in his quarters in a first-class fire station. It evidently delights an audience to go inside the heavy doors and see the working of the various apparatus and mechanical appliances. The most blass and jaded of theatre-goers cannot fall of being interested in the wonderful and thrilling scene of the Central Fire Station.

There is nothing among the happenings of every-day life in a great metropolis that awakens so much interest as the work of the gallant firemen and the dashing of the engines through the streets, drawn by powerful, spirited steeds, always attracts the attention of the throngs on the different thoroughfares. So it is little wonder that a similar scene with a real engine and real horses should, when seen on the mimic stage, amuse an audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

"The Still Alarm," outside of its sense.

"The Still Alarm," outside of its sensa tional elements, is a cleverly written play there is a variety of incident and action and the strain of melodrama is relieved by he introduction of bright, clean comedy. The story has a charming and natural love element running through it. Virtue riumphs over vice; the villain meets his just deserts, and a happy denouncement brings down the curtain. No better ex-ponent of the heroic role of Jack Monley could be found than Harry Lacy, the star of the play. He is an excellent actor and a typical hero in appearance.

The Adam Forepaugh Shows.

The Adam Forepaugh Shows. Within the last decade it is safe to say that more advancement has been made in the show business than in any other line the show business than in any other line of business in this country. This change has been wrought by several causes. In the first place, the world is steadily advancing to a higher state of art culture, and our ideas of affairs have been enlarged. Men no longer content themselves with single and plain buildings in which to exhibit their mercantile wares, as was the wont of our forefathers. Palatial blocks are now the rage, and our merchant princes have their offices as sumptuously and elegantly fitted up as did formerly the rulers of realms their palaces. palaces.

Go-ahead-activeness in all things is the rule of the day, and in no business is this more demanded than in the amusement business. With amusement caterers, business. With amusement caterers, novelty, originality and immensity must rule the day. Business men need not have entire blocks, may hap, but showmen, to be considered showmen nowadays, must cover acres of ground with their vast tents; must have have countiess thousands of wonders; must have curiosities strange, rare and hitherto unheard of; must have superior artists, must have everything, in last, which is obtainable in the way of the marvelous; they are at all times surrounded by so much competition, and so many others who lay claim to the title "Greatest," that money must be considered no object in the equipment of a great show. How encormous then must be the outlay necessary to equip such a monster unification of unequaled shows as that of the Adam Foropaugh Show. How many lands and seas must be manacked to secure artists from all quarters of the earth." The Evenerate Store the Show. Ollie Hall acted as interlocutor and Tom. McIntosh and other mirth producers kept the audience convulsed with laugh-ter during the entire first part. The songs and jokes are new, and the act of John Brewer elletted applause. James Bland annused with a speech and Palmer and McLain, assisted by Brewer and Thomas, performed several difficult acro-patic feats. The acrobatic song and dance act was paceful, and Javlin and Wilson did a when Tom McIntosh appeared, he fairly took the house and was recalled repeatedly. The Mozambique Gladiators' march was performed by the company and the entertainment concluded with "In Darkest Africa" by the Brewers.

The Carleton Company will make a prolonged stay with us. They have selected for the first week of their engagement Strauss' charming opera, "The Merry War," a work of decided merit, not alone from a vocal point, but also dramatically. It gives opportunities for beautiful chorul effects, and all of the leading artists have good soles, which are gems in melody. The principal characters will be taken by the following well-known singers, which assures an excellent interventile. Furs and Fine Goods Best Preserved In ment for the reception and preservation of such goods, where they will be kept throughout the season at very low figures, throughout the season at very low figures, the risk of loss from any cause being fully covered by the receipt of the company given therefor. Every housekeeper responsible for the care of valuable furs and woolens in summer should become acquainted with the facilities there offered. Labor and all risk of loss and consequent worry can thereby be avoided.
